Reflection

This Sunday we have a small portion of St Paul's letter to the Christian community in Philippi, written while he was in prison. This community was one of the many Christian churches he founded on his more than 6,000 miles of missionary travels. You'd think that a man who had travelled so far, met so many people, and who was so busy with his theological musings and the difficult circumstances of his life, would be too preoccupied to remember the names and circumstances of the individuals he had met on his epic journeys. And yet, in this passage Paul takes the time to name three individuals in Philippi about whom he is concerned. It seems that he never forgot the names or pastoral needs of the people he served. His example is one we should all follow. If there are people you have never spoken to and don't know the names of in our own church community there's no time like the present to change that.
